A New Perspective . . .

What's in? What's out? What happened?!? Take a second look . . . from a new perspective.

Why 'Stepping Beyond' you might ask? Because every year students at MHS do more than merely attend classes and drift through from day to day. MHS students go beyond the basics and work hard to achieve, whether athletically or intellectually. We've done our best to capture both the individual and the group successes of 1993, a year full of pride and victory.

But there's more than that. For this year's senior class, 'Stepping Beyond' means moving forward towards new experiences beyond high school. While taking on the leadership of Mansfield High School, the members of the class of 1993 are also determining their futures and shaping their dreams. With their four years of MHS as a base, the seniors are taking a large step into an uncertain world.

And to the writers and creators of this year's annual, 'Stepping Beyond' signifies the continuation of an effort to increase the quality of Mansfield's yearbook, an effort which began last year with 'A New Beginning.' This year's book is unique in its attempt to embody 1993 not only in pictures, but also in words. In putting 1993 on paper, we've included the people, places, events, and thoughts which make this year stand out from the rest.

As you turn the pages of this volume of memories, whether in 1993 or 2043, we hope you recall every aspect of life at MHS as it was for a single year in the course of time.

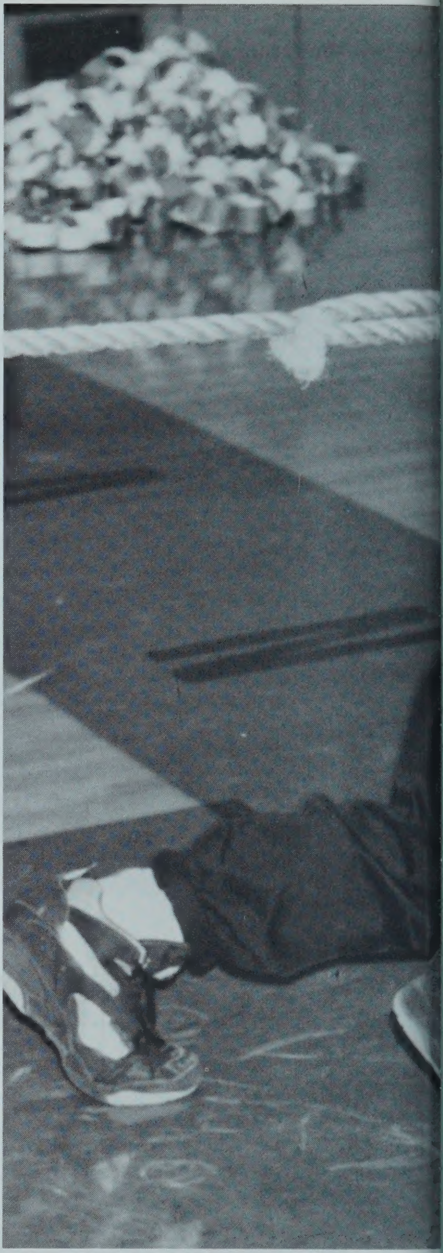
Beyond The Books

Yes, MHS students do have lives outside studying and taking tests--just take a look!



Life in the classroom is filled with pressure, exhaustion, and turmoil. You all know what we mean: quadratic equations, periodic tables, gerunds, supply and demand curves, verb conjunctions, axioms, vector addition, and the many other complex mental processes. These are the topics that overload your brain and make you want to stay home, away from this mess. Our job is to take you to a place where students can be themselves doing whatever they want, wherever they want. We have created a new and amazing addition to the yearbook called Student Life. Here you'll be able to escape the six-hour education trauma to see what everybody else is doing before and after school.

Generally, MHS students spend most of their time with other MHS students, the very same people they go to school with. Why? Because they are worked so hard that they never get a chance to be with any of their friends during school. Whether playing pool or going to the mall, the teenagers of MHS find time to go out and have fun. Other pastimes, such as dancing and working for Cable Access, are situations where students are shaping their future in something outside of school. We go further to include activities that have sprung from school related functions such as Homecoming, or the field hockey camping trip. Of course, no book could be complete without a bit of style.

We have designed the Student Life section to cover the subjects that are extremely important to the members of MHS: subjects which, for some reason, we have never before been able to place in the yearbook. We hope that the pictures and words we have assembled will remind you of what life outside of Mansfield High School entails.

On The Road To Success

The students of MHS worked hard to support the school and push for success throughout their week of homecoming.

The Canton field hockey team was shocked to see a group of hippies enter the MHS girls' locker room. Opposing teams and other visitors to Mansfield High School seemed confused by Mansfield's traditional week-full of cross-dressers, slobs, and other usually hidden identities.

Like many at MHS, sophomore Hilary Cheyne admits, "We were really lucky that our school gave us a chance to have fun by dressing up." For individuals who didn't belong to the football team, the cheerleading squad, or the band, spirit week provided an opportunity to show school spirit and let loose for a few days.

"The rally was an excellent end to an exciting week. I loved screaming as my friends attempted to win the tug-of-war. The most suspenseful part was waiting to hear who would be on the homecoming court," says junior court member Katie Borroni.

The festivities picked up on Saturday morning in the high school parking lot where classes added the finishing touches to their floats. The week of school spirit transcended into a celebration for the whole town as the band lead the annual parade through streets of downtown Mansfield.

The days of support paid off as the football team directed its power and determination into some excellent playing at Memorial Park. The afternoon climaxed with a 42-21 win over Attleboro High School— the division 3A Superbowl contenders. The football team's win was the result of their effort combined with the support of both the school and the town.

Saturday night's dance marked the close of an excellent week. "This dance wasn't great just because we beat Attleboro. Nobody will forget the DJ's attempt to create a smokescreen. We all ended up outside for an unplanned fire drill," comments junior Kerry Richardson. As the dance ended, students knew that their next week of school would be a normal one.

With bell-bottoms, sandals, and beads, Shannon Burwell and Sarah Mullin take full advantage of spirit week's opportunity to find new identities.

On the senior float, Julie Alleruzzo, Melissa Landers, Kerry Austin, Matt Fleischman, and Dave Tierney sport their enthusiasm for Mansfield.

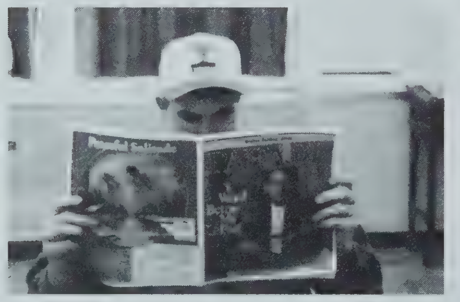
Dressed For Success

Choosing what to wear presents a daily problem for MHS students. Between selecting clean clothes and finding shoes to wear, it's a wonder anyone can get to school on time. But judging from the results of the school-wide fashion survey, the Mansfield High student body knows exactly what to wear. Whether it be tight and short, or loose and long, outfits reflect the variety of student tastes.

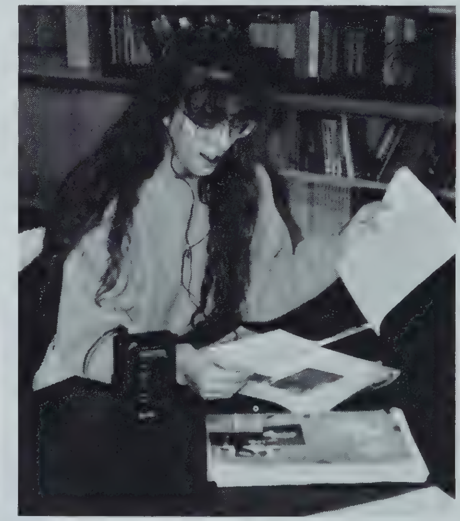
Typically, MHS students spend less than five minutes getting dressed each morning. "It doesn't take much for me," admits freshman Jon Pierce, "I just think about what I'm going to wear while I'm in the shower." Others, like senior Mike Hourigan, decide what to put on "as [they] pull it out of the drawer." A minority of students, almost entirely girls, take time to plan outfits or to change them. "Sometimes I don't like the way a sweater looks, so I put on a different shirt," contends freshman Stacey Mullin.

Brand names play big roles in the high school fashion scene. Gap, Girbaud, and Guess labels flood the halls, on both guys' and girls' clothing. Champion sweatshirts and turtlenecks continue to be a hit with the male population, while Esprit tops the chart for girls. Despite junior John Maldonado's claim that, "Z Cavaricci's are out!", the label remains a favorite at MHS. Designer labels, though popular, are not a necessity for most students, however. "I don't go by the brand names. I get whatever looks good," remarks junior Brad Varney. Maldonado agrees, "If the shirt's nice, I buy it. The label doesn't make the difference."

Above all, comfort decides the attire at MHS. For a school that lives for the Slob and Sweats day of spirit week, it's not suprising that blue jeans coupled with a sweater or a t-shirt make up the customary outfits. As senior Lisa Caldwell summarizes, "I wear whatever's comfortable and what I feel good in. I think everybody does. Don't you?"



Baseball caps are a favorite among MHS guys and girls, "I wear one every day," says sophomore Dave Sullivan. "It's easier and I don't have to worry about my hair sticking up."



Wearing walkmans has become a trend at MHS. While most students listen to their music just for fun, senior Stephanie Morse explains, "I wear headphones to concentrate--to keep the noise out when I'm working on my homework."

At right, sophomore Kim Sestito turns to show her B.U.M. Equipment label, another school favorite.

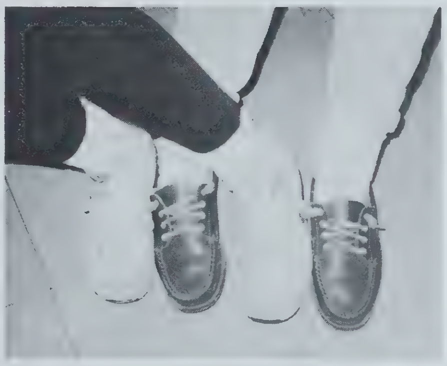
Junior Jeff Malone boasts his Polo shirt. "I wear Polos because I like them, they're the best."

Mike Hourigan sports his fresh-from-the-drawer attire. "Why bother?" the senior asks.



Bass and Nike are two of the most popular brands of shoes at the high school, according to the fashion survey. Adidas and Champion sneakers also top the charts.

Gasping for breath, Jen Lantz jumps out from the bin of multi-colored balls at McDonald's in Norton.

Even Spanish exchange student Sonia Cardador Fernandez and her teacher Angel Vecino Perez know that Marcello's is a regular hot spot on half-days or any day.

Having A Ball

Around the town, anyone can see MHS students having fun on their own time away from the pressures of school.

"Where do you hang out?" That is the question we have asked. What are the answers? Well, most could be expected, but there are some strange replies.

"Wherever there's people" is the most popular answer. Becky Beaudoin says, "We just drive around . . . we hang out in our car." The strange thing about that is . . . how far can you drive in Mansfield? Cumberland Farms, AKA Cumby's, is another hot spot. Notes Sue Yarletts, "everyone ends up there."

Sweet 'N Crafty seemed to be a happening place earlier this year. Dave Williams recalls, "We'd buy one small coke and sit there for hours." He also remembers a few times when they were thrown out. McDonald's proved to be "the place to be" one Saturday night for karaoke. Everyone showed up ready to sing and have fun. A few people can always be found there on other not-so-entertaining nights.

Playing pool is another popular pastime. Brad Varney claims Fast Break is "the only place to play pool." Andrea Moro disagrees, noting that she and her friends always "go to (her) house to play pool." Hanging out at someone's house to watch movies or just letting loose entertains those without cars. Others spend many cool nights at the Wonderworks playground, proving recess to be a tradition which dies hard.

After long days of classes, many high-schoolers hang out in the front lobby or in the gym playing basketball. We must not hate school as much as we say . . . The South Common or the Emerald Square Mall are popular meeting spots also. The movies are a safe bet for killing a few hours. Missy Kane says she goes there to see "who's with who." Some things are just more important than the movies, though. Alo Murkerji says she studies on the weekends. Wouldn't every parent like to hear that? "Ask someone who has a life," is definately the saddest answer.

We always say there's nothing to do here in boring Mansfield, but somehow we have always been able to find places to "hang out." The question no one seems to want to comment on is "What exactly do you do when you hang out?" Hmmmmmmm . . .

Coming To America

Students from MHS enjoyed many hours with exchange students from Japan, Germany, and Spain.

Why would someone come over 10,000 miles to spend time in Mansfield? "Why not," answers Katja Strauss.

All the exchange students seem to have adapted nicely to Mansfield High. Six individuals from Spain visited from September thirteenth to October ninth. While only staying for a short time, these students and their teacher enjoyed places such as Plymouth Plantation and Boston. Their periodic field trips gave them a chance to see what opportunities Massachusetts has to offer.

Three other exchange students have chosen to stay in Mansfield for the year. Katja Strauss, from Zittau, Germany participates in drama, concert choir, field hockey, track, and yearbook. She enjoys shopping and the movies but finds Mansfield a little boring at times--everyone can agree to that! When returning home, she will look forward to socializing at German clubs. At times, the fifteen academic subjects Katja must take every term in Germany can be overwhelming. "Ice cream and dances are my favorite things," she comments.

Ryo Gondo, from Itoda, Japan, is also staying for the year. When at home, he enjoys teaching swimming lessons. Ryo notes that between Japanese and American schooling, a major difference is that Japanese students must attend all-day Saturday classes in addition to a full weekly academic schedule. Although Ryo sings with the concert choir here, he still misses his frequent karaoke performances in Itoda.

Finally, Hisashi Otokawa from Yokohama, Japan feels more comfortable at Mansfield after having participated in basketball intramurals, leading to a spot on the MHS varsity basketball team.

It would seem that their lives in Mansfield are not too different from their lives at home, but Katja has discovered that to enjoy yourself in the U.S. "You need a car to get everywhere." Isn't that how it always is?

Splitting It Up

For students at MHS, dancing has become a popular diversion.

'Dancing is my life; my life is dancing.' I see this line at the end of every notice and every newsletter I receive at the dance school. It's printed in tiny letters on the bottom of the page, surrounded by drawings of little girls in pink tu-tus and boys in top hats with long black canes. To a dancer, the line describes everything from the countless hours of practice without rest in a small studio reeking of sweat to the feelings of accomplishment and pride at the end of a performance. "We dance as a way to express ourselves and our love of life," a dancer once told me, "and once you lose that love, you lose the magic of dance."

Not every person, however, sees that magic in dance. To most high school students, dance is a stale word that describes the Saturday night social events in the cafeteria of the school: the small cliques of people, the empty dance floor, and the struggling DJ against the far wall. Only after an hour or so does the first group of students hesitantly walk onto the dance floor and begin to dance. Then, once everyone begins to have a good time, the D.J. announces the last song and afterwards everyone leaves, disappointed and full of complaints.

"How was the dance?" one kid asks.

"Boring," another answers, "nobody went and those that did didn't even dance until about 10 PM."

Dancing then becomes something to do "when nothing else is going on."

At the same time, though, dances can be a great way to meet someone. As Alo Mukerji states, "It's a social event that gives you the chance to meet new people that you may not speak to in a normal school circumstance."

Although everyone has a different perception of dancing, it remains an enjoyable pastime and can make for a great date.

Lighting The Way For The Future

Members of the National Honor Society actively play a role in the community to prepare for their futures.

". . .And on being accepted into the National Honor Society, each of you is required to do at least six hours of community service a month," Miss Wood concluded. "Have fun."

"You must be kidding! What are we going to do for six hours of volunteer work?" the students all thought to themselves as they hurried out of the auditorium.

Being active within the school and getting good grades seemed to be the easy part. But as the days passed, the NHS members realized the many possibilities for service both inside the school and out. Some students joined clubs such as S.A.F.E.R. and S.A.D.D., while others began to tutor in either the math lab or the writing center a couple of days a week. Kara Torman is able to complete her community services doing what she loves the most, demonstrating dance to children. Likewise, Andrew Cournoyer participates in a 'Together We Can' drug and alcohol prevention counsel. Those who like to work with people have chosen to help at hospitals or nursing homes, delivering water or kleenex boxes when needed. Thus, every student has the opportunity to do what he or she likes.

Regardless of what service a student volunteers to complete, doing community work leaves each individual with a feeling of accomplishment, pride, and togetherness with the community. Alo Mukerji states, "I think that the other members of NHS can agree that the sense of community service is one of the greatest rewards of being in the National Honor Society."

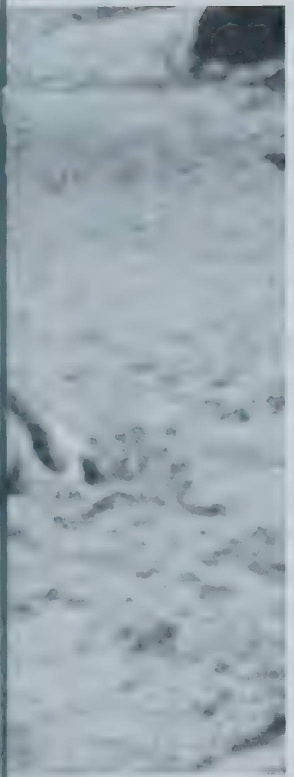
Taking a Rest

After working their hardest on the field, the field hockey team took a break to relax for their first time in months.



On Saturday, October 10, the senior members of the field hockey team, as well as Coach Levine and Coach Hill, headed down to Nickerson State Park for a weekend in "The Great Outdoors."

Upon arriving, they erected "Bozo's Big Top," "The Big Tee-Pee," and the "Space Coaster." They then embarked on a day of hiking, biking, game playing, and napping. After a 'very organized' game of Scattergories, the rain began--hardly dampening their spirits but soaking most everything else.

As night closed in, they got a fire going and enjoyed a chicken and potatoes dinner topped with spirited conversation. Around the campfire, they discussed what field hockey meant to each player and coach. There was laughter, tears, and more laughter.

That Saturday night . . . it POURED! As a result, they were all up at the crack of dawn Sunday for some breakfast at Norma Jean's and a trip to the Cape Cod Natural Sea Shore. Anxious to return, they left the beach later that day to take down the camping equipment and head home.

Jen Fontes had the perfect quote for the trip: "Although the phrase 'roughing it' was given a new meaning . . . we all, in the same way, had a great and memorable time."

In Focus

Students from MHS are focusing in on television production whether on camera, audio, or graphics.

There is a small group at MHS which doesn't receive a varsity letter or go on field trips. These students bring the school's activities into every home of the student body. They are the volunteers of Mansfield Cable Eight. From high school sports broadcasts to the show Triviality, the students have productions to interest everyone. They take time out of their busy schedules to learn to produce shows and run a television station.

Of all their shows, Triviality and Late Night Exposure are the most popular. High school students work the cameras, create the graphics, direct the shots, host the show and organize the whole production. Not bad for a group of teenagers.

These students have done something amazing that cannot be learned in a classroom: they have applied their own skills and abilities to keep their audience informed of MHS. No one has requested that these students work the station. On their own, this group has volunteered their time and effort to develop new interests. Thus, in this world of adults, these MHS students have dominated. Through their creativity and diligence, these individuals have influenced what people see of MHS and posses the potential to influence TV in the 21st century.

Stepping Into The Spotlight

By participating in MHS's many extracurricular activities, students showcase their talents and uncover new interests.

For a moment, if only for a moment, you're the one receiving the applause—the one who deserves the credit. Whether you just finished your solo in the play or scored your best in an academic competition or finally tutored the seemingly untutorable, you're in the spotlight; your hard work has paid off.

Yet MHS's clubs and activities offer far more than brief successes. With their alluring appeal, these organizations encourage students to take on challenges and responsibilities on top of their studies. In this section, we've highlighted those at MHS who dedicated their time both during and after school to this year's high school groups: what they did and how they did it.

These groups were important not only for what they accomplished, however, but also for the strong friendships and lasting memories they formed. Each club had its own mix, its own quirks, and its own experiences. We've tried to distinguish each group's unique characteristics so that you might remember what made each one special.

Playing It Cool

Through snow and rain, the MHS Marching Band kept it's cool to complete an unpredictable season.

For the Mansfield High School Marching Band, the 1992 fall marching season was another 'building year.' "We brought a lot of new kids up [from the middle school], a lot of new kids and I think that affected us in a big way," says Brad Varney, "We were more on the edge— people were less confident." With the smallest number of high school participants in years, the band turned to the middle school to increase its size and remain competitive.

Although frustrated throughout the season by low scores and poor placings, the band gained a personal sense of accomplishment. Erica Scialdone, co-captain of the color guard, recalls when the guard scored higher than the goal she had set for them, "It was at finals— I was really psyched." Referring to the drum line, Brian Thibault notes, "They were young and inexperienced, but they pulled it all together in the end the best they could." Jeremy Kroger, one of only four seniors in the band this year remembers his best playing at the Dartmouth High School Competition, "I nailed my solo."

Performing in costume for a second year, the band played selections from "West Side Story" in a field show which included scenery, a rumble, and a murder. "Putting the show together took a lot of commitment and a lot of faith in the show and the drum majors," comments Varney, "But you've gotta have fun, too." While the band's unconventional approach to marching may not have pleased the judges, it certainly caught the crowd's attention and made the season more interesting. "I didn't mind wearing my costume at all," says Kroger, "The other bands idolized us."

Singing It Out

With voices raised, members of the concert choir sing out the tunes of the season.

While the message behind the choir's Christmas play and holiday concert hasn't changed for years, something about the performance always leaves the audience with a stronger sense of the season and draws the members of the MHS concert choir back year after year. What makes this experience so memorable? "I love the people in it," says Cheryl Tupaj, "It's a close group." Jen O'Brien agrees, "I like the people--everyone's very friendly."

Every Christmas play at MHS has its elves and grinches, but every year the faces change, changing the composition of the group and the structure of the play. "Again we had a diverse group of people which gave us a broad range of personalities and talent," comments Patty McKeever. "The people that you least expected to do well did the best," notes Dave Korins, "the newcomers were the big surprise this year."

Many newcomers to the choir are also newcomers to the stage. Says Tupaj of performing in front of her peers, "It's good for my confidence. I'm doing things I've never done before for the first time." Working together not only to prepare a holiday concert, but also to build each other's confidence, members of the concert choir continue a tradition of closeness.

Piecing It Together

By joining the Spanish Club, students combine their textbook knowledge with new experiences.

Mansfield High School's Spanish club, led by Ms. Smith, offers a variety of activities for students to share their interests in the Spanish Language and traditions. "I joined the Spanish Club because it's an interesting way to learn about the Spanish culture outside the classroom, and I'm able to talk to other students," says sophomore Kristin Downey.

This year, the club was able to talk not only with other students from MHS, but also with students from Fuelanbroda, Spain. For the first time in more than four years, Mansfield held a Spanish foreign exchange, giving club members a chance to interact with other teenagers from a different background. Meeting with the exchange students, the Spanish club members had the opportunity to compare American and Spanish high school experiences and interests.

To further their understanding of the Spanish culture, students in the Spanish Club hold monthly meetings to celebrate Spanish Holidays, whether making pinatas or recreating Picasso's art, and plan field trips. By experiencing as much of Spain as they can here in Mansfield, Spanish Club members gain a broader perspective on life in Spain.

French Connection

French Club festivities got off to a great start with this year's Halloween party. Complete with games and goodies, the club enjoyed an American holiday in a French way. "We bobbed for 'pommes' and got soaking wet," remembers Kerri Santsaver, a sophomore responsible for a clothing race activity.

During the Christmas season, the club raised money selling advent calendars. "We do it every year," comments Danielle Roberts. But, with the busy holiday schedule, the French Club was unable to arrange their usual Noel celebration. In place of the party, the French Club planned their own Mardi-Gras. Since the French-Louisiana holiday involves costume parades, members designed masks and, as with every French Club party, experienced

Face The Music

The MHS orchestra encountered several problems this year. In fact, the orchestra almost disbanded due to scheduling conflicts. "Everybody wanted different practice times," explains sophomore Brian Patel, "eventually we compromised for after-school sessions."

The group also faced size problems and had to recruit two eighth-grade cellists. "Without the cellists, we wouldn't sound as good, and we'd just be too small," says senior Becky O'Neil. A shortage of violinists has also hindered the group. "Since there aren't many violins, we're limited to the kind of music we can play," comments sophomore Laura Jastrem.

Youth was the final obstacle the orchestra had to overcome. Only two of the fourteen participants were upperclassmen and, as a whole, the ensemble had little experience playing together. "Experience would have been nice," notes freshman Kaitlin Hoffman, "but we're doing fine anyway."

The Write Stuff

With open minds and active imaginations, Forum members share their writing.

When Mrs. Webb first proposed starting a Writer's Forum, she hoped that it would be a place where students could share their work with other students. Today this is exactly what the Writer's Forum has become.

The members meet every Wednesday with advisors Mrs. Webb and Mrs. Neimi to read their stories, essays, and poems to one another. Mrs. Neimi says the forum "brings together those that are interested in the written expression." The interest in writing initially draws students to the Writer's Forum, but it is the comfortable aura of the writing center which holds them there. This is exactly why Chris Penesis joined, "I joined because it was a place where I could read my own work and read other people's work in a small group setting."

This setting gives the members the confidence to read their work and feel comfortable giving and accepting constructive criticism. Says David Smith, "No one takes criticism personally—it's the free exchange of ideas." Erin Sharicz agrees, "I joined the Writer's Forum to hear other people's ideas and criticism and get inspirations for my own writings."

The Writer's Forum also sponsors and judges an annual story contest at the high school. The top seven stories are submitted to the Stylus. David Smith says, "We hold the contest to encourage people who may not be able to meet weekly or who may be too shy to come to the Writer's Forum." The Writer's Forum allows students to feel proud of what they've written and encourages them to share their work.

Although taking only a small step, MHS recyclers are cutting back on waste at the high school in hopes of . . . .

Saving The Earth

From sports to clubs, Mansfield High School has never lacked extracurricular activities for its students. But this year something new has turned up: the Recycling Club. Initiated by a new faculty member, Mr. Carver-Brown, the club has attracted a multitude of environmentally concerned students. "I believe that recycling is the best way we, as students, can help the planet," comments sophomore Brian Patel. Other members agree, sighting interest in the future of the environment as their main motivation.

Of the club participants, many are already involved in recycling at home, and to them it seems natural to carry it over into the school. "I try to recycle at home so when the club started, I wanted to join," states sophomore Denise Carrara. Although the students generally save plastics, glass, aluminum cans, and newspapers at home, the club has decided to target the school's copy paper which is normally thrown away. With aspirations to set up a recycling program throughout the entire school system, the Recycling Club has a difficult job ahead of them. But, as sophomore Kristin Downey notes, "Hopefully we can get everyone to cooperate."

Help Wanted

For those who need a helping hand, student mediators are willing to get involved.

No one said high school is easy. Aside from the homework and classes, the social aspect of student life contributes to the pressures of being a teenager. But MHS has found a way to help its students cope and better get along with one another: student mediation. The program involves a group of freshmen and sophomores helping their peers with problems. "I help my friends out and I thought mediation would be a good way to help other people," comments Kelly Richard, one of the seven participating sophomores.

But, as the group has quickly realized, becoming a mediator requires more than a desire to help others. After attending the three all-day training sessions to learn about discussing and resolving conflicts, the students now understand the techniques behind mediation. "It's a lot more in-depth than I thought it would be," states freshman Adam Briggs.

In addition to improving the atmosphere at MHS, the mediators are helping themselves. "This program has taught me ways I can help myself deal with problems," notes one participant, "I can relate my experiences to what I've learned."

Summing It Up

With numbers still rolling around in their heads, the MHS Math Team summed up a successfull year.

For the MHS Math Team, the pressures of quick-thinking, high-leveled mathematics extend beyond classroom quizzes into the seldom explored realm of academic competition. "[Math competitions] have made me look for exact solutions to problems," says senior Joe Correia, "the correctors don't give partial credit."

Just like every-day math tests and quizzes, math contests often produce last minute cramming and anxieties. "The first time I learned logarithms was on a bus, going to a math meet," remembers Correia.

Math competition, however, adds a unique dimension to mathematics, "This year's team has developed their own esprit de corps," remarks advisor Mr. Barnes, head of the math department, "The attitude of success breeds success." Although Brian Guild recalls a disappointing Dighton-Rehoboth meet, he attributed the loss to the fact that "we only had 8 people, so I guess that's not so bad."

This year's team, while developing into a dedicated group of individuals, struggled at times, not for lack of talent, but at a disadvantage because of its size. "Academic competition often doesn't receive as much emphasis as we'd like it to," comments Barnes, "but parents have been really supportive over the years, as well as the Booster's Club and the teaching staff."

Nevertheless, the team had its highlights, with a strong team showing in its mail-in competitions and many notable efforts by seniors Cheryl Tupaj, Stephanie Morse, Joe Correia, and Patrick Hansen, and junior John Maldonado in the league meets. As a group, this team raised the hopes and expectations of the MHS math team to a higher power.

Brain Games

Putting their minds to the test, MHS students tackle the Academic Decathlon

Eight years ago, the state of Massachusetts established a new school "sport," one which requires no physical strength or athletic ability. Like a sport, the Academic Decathlon demands self discipline and dedication. Unlike athletic competition, however, the Decathlon is a pure test of brain-power. And why assume extra studies and hard work after a long day of school? Mr. Perry, head advisor of the team, admits "Academic Decathlon is definitely not for all kids. It is for those who really want to put their minds to work and expand their degree of knowledge beyond the classroom in areas such as the classical arts and geography."

The theme for this year's competition was multi-cultural influence, reflecting the need for a higher global awareness in today's society. At the competition, the nine members of the team began the day by taking the individual tests, each examination lasting a half hour and varying from 25 to 50 questions. Out of these tests, Kelliann O'Donnell earned a bronze medal in economics and Mike Hourigan also earned a bronze in the fine arts. The day concluded with the Super-Quiz, a series of Jeopardy-style rounds where each team member took his turn on the main floor to answer five questions in competition with students from other schools.

Students who participate in the Academic Decathlon enjoy the challenge. Stephanie Morse, who received a medal for highest scorer and was voted 'hardest worker' by the team, says, "I would recommend Academic Decathlon for those willing to put time into it. The competition is tough; you want to do your best."

Down And Dirty

When it comes to science, the Science Club members aren't afraid to get their hands dirty.

Many think the Science Club is an easy club without any serious activities: they couldn't be more wrong. The Science Club offers a multitude of activities to keep members involved in hands-on experiences. This fall students planted daffodils and hyacinths. "A total mixture of people showed up and we planted for about two hours. It wasn't what had I expected. Everyone had a good time even though they were working," says sophomore Kerri Santsaver. The club has planned another planting for the end of the school year.

Activities to help the students are also high on the agenda for the Science Club. This year's members were active in the Great American Smoke Out. Sophomore Brian McGrail remarks, "We gathered information from the National Cancer Society, and made posters and pamphlets. It wasn't as much as we had done in the past, but we still knew it was important." In addition to the Smoke Out, the Science Club sponsored a "Careers in Science" Seminar to benefit MHS students. Speakers from various fields, like marine biology, chemical engineering, and dietetics visited the school to direct minds towards future science careers.

As a result of its activities, the Science Club ranks highest in student participation. Sophomore Kerri Dempsey believes, "The chance to meet and socialize with people you might not normally hang around with accounts for the great deal of interest in the club." Senior Alo Mukerji thinks, "The combination of educational science with fun activities appeals to the student body."

Although tutors sometimes have the opportunity to play a game of chess or talk, their jobs in MHS's learning centers are . . .

Not Just Fun And Games

Students seeking extra help aren't the only ones who gain from MHS's Math Lab and Writing Center; the tutors also benefit. In addition to earning extra credits and fulfilling volunteer requirements for the National Honor Society, tutors learn from their work. Junior Shannon Burwell remembers, "In Algebra 2, I never really understood 'Coordinates In Space,' but this year, when someone came in for help on that section, I finally got it. I was so happy!" Writing Center tutors also believe that, in working with other students' problems, they can spot some of their own weaknesses more easily.

Aside from academics, tutoring has taught the students a little about life and provides them with some enjoyment during the day. While junior Allison Jones says, "Tutoring has taught me not to be afraid to ask for help," senior Jen Carlson thinks she has become "more tactful" from her experience. Math Lab tutors believe they have learned the most, claiming to lead the school in figuring out crazy brain-teaser puzzles and, as Andy Cournoyer says, "learning how to play chess."

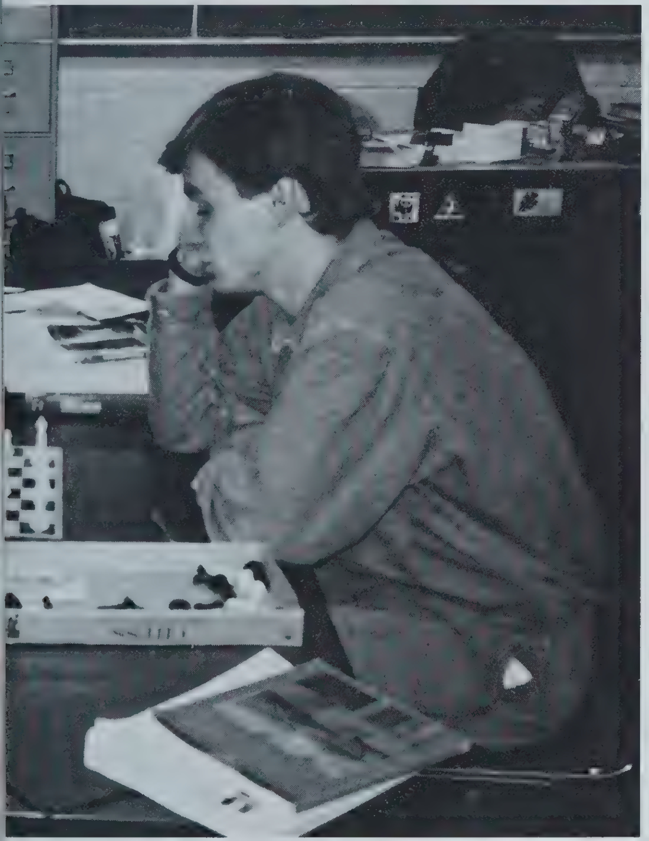
Splicing tapes, sophomores Michael Gallagher and Joshua Hamilton complete their work as AV aides.

Shelving books, junior Jessica Moore helps to keep the library organized.



Live Aid

With dedication and efficiency, library and audio-visual aides keep the high school library running.

Making copies faster than a speeding bullet! Able to shelve encyclopedias in a single bound! It's a bird! It's a plane! It's--no, not Superman--the library aide! Despite their low profiles at MHS, the student aides are an integral part of the media center. "It makes the library more of a part of the school," notes head librarian Mrs. Lane, "and provides a nice community for everyone."

In addition to filing magazines and printing banners, organizing shelves and checking in books, student library aides help other students with their research. "Sometimes when a class comes in, we help them find information, resources, and articles," notes freshman Leah Tobin. Audio-visual aides help out too, bringing VCR's and televisions to classrooms and recording programs for teachers to use in a class.

Recently, the library and audio-visual aides have formed the Library Club. Open only to media center aides, the club has already started collecting used books for a book sale commemorating National Library Week. "With the proceeds from the sale, we are going to buy baby books for the Mansfield babies born during Library Week," comments Library Club president Jessica Moore.

Holding It Up

In every situation, MHS sports captains are called on to hold their teams together and strive for success.

Being a captain means a lot more than having the initials Capt. on the sleeve of your varsity jacket. Ms. Conaty, the athletic director, makes sure the captains know this each year by involving them in the Hockomock Captain's Leadership Conference in September. Valerie Kostaras, spring track co-captain, got the idea after attending the conference this year. "The main point was to make us realize the responsibilities we were taking on and that [being a captain] is not a joke or something to take lightly." The day-long conference promoted sportsmanship, involving all Hockomock captains. For most athletes, this is the only day the players interact with each other out of uniform. The conference also prepares captains to be able to create spirit, lead the team, and make decisions concerning chemical health. Soccer, basketball, and tennis captain Roberta MacIvor says, "I have to generate enthusiasm and always keep a positive attitude within the team and make sure everyone is conditioned and stays in shape." As MacIvor might have found out this year, maintaining team spirit is much easier during a winning season. Trying to bring confidence and spirit levels up after several losses can be a challenging task for a captain. Says Jen Fontes, softball co-captain, of such a situation, "You have to try to keep their spirits up by convincing them that every game's a new game and they can win it."

The captain has to try to improve not only the team's mentality, but also its conditioning. Says basketball co-captain Bob Green of captains' practices, "It's hard to get everybody to listen sometimes because I'm on the same level as them."

Being a captain is more than wearing the title on your coat or buying the coach's gift. It's giving and expecting respect, leading practices and setting good examples; spreading spirit and a positive attitude throughout the team whether you win or lose.

Messing Around

As many know, being a member of the Student Council means keeping busy. Rallies . . . dances . . . scholarships . . . these are only a few of the responsibilities the council has. Alo Mukerji, the Student Council president, summarizes the council's job as "providing and organizing the student body with activities to encourage school spirit and student involvement." The Student Council at MHS consists of four officers, sixteen class officers, and thirty-five homeroom representatives.

The four officers are responsible for organizing committees for dances, spirit week, and other events. "We spend a lot of time working on spirit week," comments Lisa Caldwell, the Student Council secretary. Says council treasurer Amy Richendollar of the officers' many tasks, "The dances are probably the most important and also the rallies and spirit contests." In running these events, the council officers see to not only the major planning but also the minor details, obtaining parade permits and making sure the Homecoming queen gets her crown.

Class officers focus on their own classes to organize fund-raisers and special events. The seniors try to plan an affordable class trip and senior banquet, while the junior officers are traditionally responsible for hosting the prom. The sophomore officers run the ring sale and the freshmen concentrate on building both spirit and a bank account.

Finally, the homeroom representatives attend council meetings and report back to their homerooms with all the latest information on upcoming events. The representatives, composing the majority of the council, are the largest source of spirit in the high school. "Spirit week is fun, I love spirit week, especially pajama day," remarks sophomore representative Kerri Santsaver.

From The Advisor:

The 1993 edition of the Mansfield High School Yearbook 'Stepping Beyond' was a labor of love for all involved. The intrepid staff, under the outstanding leadership and creative drive of editor Patrick Hansen, identified the prominent aspects of this particular school year, evaluated the note-worthy elements to be featured, designed the entire format, and ultimately produced this compilation of the people and events that made up the 1992-1993 school year.

Shannon Burwell, Sarah Mullin, and Kerri Santsaver were dominant members of our staff. Along with Patrick, these individuals were the curators of this unique school year. Their acumen, diligence, and pride are to be commended. They were a powerful source of inspiration for me.

Finally, I would like to express my appreciation for the leadership role Patrick Hansen assumed in completing this mission. His expertise, experience, and confidence will assure him of success in whatever he endeavors.

To the entire staff--thanks for letting me watch as your dreams became a reality. Good luck to all as you continue 'Stepping Beyond.'

From The Editor:

When I joined the yearbook staff as a freshman, assembling the yearbook meant getting two or three people together a couple times a year to slap together a few photos and hit the usual people for the usual advertising. The times have certainly changed.

This year's staff has been impressive not only in its size, but also in its sincere dedication. I couldn't have been more surprised when over fifty students suddenly appeared at the first yearbook meeting back in September. The room just kept filling. Almost thirty of those students stayed active throughout the year. I can't thank my friends and classmates enough for taking an interest in the yearbook and helping out with this year's annual.

Along the line of thanks, I hope this year's section editors already know the depth of my gratitude. I would've gone insane without you guys! This year's editors were ready to face tougher challenges than any other group I've ever worked with. I pushed you guys to the edge and I feel, and hope you agree, that holding and seeing these pages makes every late Friday and long afternoon worthwhile in retrospect.

Of course, I can't forget the head man, Mr. Modica. Although only in his second year as advisor, Mr. Modica kept me going in the right direction, not only through his experiences in yearbook, but in life. We did it! You knew we could.

Now for the list: I'd like to thank my mom and dad for all their support, Mrs. Pierce, Mrs. Baptiste, Mrs. Kitchen, Norm and Jim and the gang, Mr. Rosa, Mrs. Flaherty, Mr. Bachand, Norv (sorry if I gave you a hard time), the lady from Josten's I kept getting on the phone, Andrea and Diane for taking me back, the local business community for supporting this book and its supplement overwhelmingly, Mr. Harsch and Mrs. Maceil for always stopping by, Chestnut Hills Studios, and Jason Forget for giving us as start.

Stepping Into The Game

Sports have become a large part of students' lives at MHS.

Standing before the crowd, you shake your coach's hand. He nods and smiles to assure you that you deserve the recognition. Instantly, memories run through your mind of practicing with the team, working out on your own, and ultimately pushing yourself to the limits at every game.

Sports at Mansfield High School challenge students in many ways. Taking home the trophy is not necessarily the most important thing for the majority of the population at MHS. Many students just want to belong. By joining a sport, an individual can excel at something outside of school. A sport takes you away from the stress of schoolwork to find enjoyment in a new environment. Some students also play sports for the competition. They discover that putting hard work, dedication, and time into a sport can result in achieving whatever goals they set for themselves.

The particular sport a person decides to play depends on what the student wants to accomplish. If striving for individual success excites a student then he might play golf or run track, because in these sports a person competes with himself the most. A team sport involves not only perfecting one's own skills, but also the skills of the team to be able to work as one unit.

In this section, we have tried to show you the sports offered by Mansfield High School. Each page reveals a new group of students with their own memories and accomplishments. Hopefully, others may be able to understand why sports play such an essential role in the lives of students at MHS.

Although the team was gasping for breath at times during their season, they could breathe easy after doing well at the South Shore Meet.

With the fewest participants of any other MHS sport, the gallant striders of the cross country team finished their season with an outstanding 7-2 record.

The season was full of team and individual success stories. The MHS harriers came back to crush King Philip, after a disappointing loss to them in their first confrontation, and finished second overall in this championship meet. They also finished a solid seventh out of twenty-four teams at the South Shore Tournament. Great individual performances by Jeff Malone, Jerry Mackie, and Brian McGrail earned them all Hockomock League Honors.

Next year, the cross country team hopes to give our school a brilliant "green banner" to hang on the gym wall with all the other MHS success stories. "Everyone knows we will earn it!," enthusiastically remarks sophomore Jarod Forget who eagerly awaits the fight for a championship in 1993.

Sticking With It

Following in the footsteps of the 1991 team, the enthusiastic field hockey squad continued their history of excellence.

For the Mansfield High School varsity field hockey team, the '92 season was more than successful, it made history. The team started out their season with double sessions and high expectations for the year.

Senior Kerri Joyce remembers, "I knew we had a strong team from the beginning but we didn't want to get ahead of ourselves. Our attitudes played an important role in having a winning season." And that's just what this team did. They defeated their first three opponents and continued their winning streak. No one could stop the Hornet's spectacular offense which specialized in exploding in the second half of the game. In the back field, the Hornet defense resembled an iron curtain, rejecting everyone who tried to break through.

Goalie Julie Alleruzzo reaches new heights in the net, setting new MHS records with the least goals scored on her, the best score percentage, and the most shut-outs in a season.

The road to victory wasn't an easy one with teams such as Stoughton, Canton, and Oliver Ames, trying their hardest to knock Hornet hockey down. As the season continued so did the winning streak, with many shut-outs similar to their 7-0 victory over Sharon. The team was unstoppable.

In crushing their opponents, the field hockey team broke into the record books. The highlight of the season came when the Hornets were named Hockomock League Champions! It was the first time the team had ever received a league title. In addition to a league championship and an undefeated regular season, the field hockey team finished with one of the best records of all the MHS fall sports teams. Although leaving the team will be difficult for the graduating seniors, they will always remember, "We Are The Champions!"

At far left, Melissa Landers, who now holds the records for the most goals scored in a career and in a single season, flips the ball past a Canton field player.

Surging Ahead

Combining experience and determination, the football team rewrote the MHS record books this year with a perfect season.

Football requires far more than raw talent. It is a sport where character and desire are equally important. "The will to win is useless, useless unless you're willing to prepare to win," repeated co-captain Tony Forte throughout the season.

For this year's team, the 1993 season began back in 1992 after a hard loss to Foxboro. The team then realized that they had a long road ahead of them and made up the distance with many long hours in the weightroom. After months of hard work, it was evident that the Hornets were ready to take on not only the Hockomock League but also the state.

As the day of their first game drew near, each practice became more important. The team developed the closeness and comradery of a family, preparing to take on New Bedford, the biggest school in the state. The day before the game, Coach Redding gathered all the seniors and asked, "What are your goals for this year?" No one had his sights set any lower than the State Championship.

From the moment Omari Walker returned the opening kickoff of the New Bedford game, it was evident that this Hornet team would see little competition throughout the season. The first nine games provided few challenges for the MHS team whose mighty offense, anchored by Josh Marder, Kris Drew, Brian Lavery, Sean Gray, Jamie Sullivan, and the top runningbacks in the state, accumulated over four hundred points throughout the fall.

The Hornets finished off their regular season by shutting out Foxboro with a hard-pitched display of defense and an overwhelming offensive attack. The game was highlighted by Tony Forte's 80 yard touchdown run, and earned an undefeated Mansfield team its second Superbowl berth in four years.

On a snowy December afternoon, the Hornets travelled to Winthrop ready to meet their toughest opponents yet. Although faltering slightly in the first quarter and facing their first deficit of the year, the team regained their poise and powered their way to a 13-12 lead at half-time. After the intermission, the men in green took control, dominating the final two quarters and winning their first State Championship 20-12.

Keep On Swinging

Despite a string of losses, the 1992 golf team never lowered their clubs.

With a young enthusiastic team, Mr. Hershman and Mr. Nilson set out on September 1st to Norton Country Club for their first practice. Not knowing what to expect, the freshmen members nervously came and showed that age does not matter in a sport of individual success and self-motivation.

"When I was younger, I always used to play golf but I almost didn't in high school because I didn't think they had a team. Golf just does not get as much publicity and support as other fall sports. Now that I belong, I see that it is not that we aren't respected —we're just not noticed," says freshman Jonathan Pierce. Sophomore Jim Fasino adds, "Unlike most sports, golf is based upon what you can accomplish all by yourself. When you lose a match or shoot a bad score, you cannot blame another teammate. Golf allows a person to be honest with himself and to find out the extent of his talents."

Although the team did not have a winning record, they learned a lot about themselves. Twenty-one individuals began the season but twenty-one friends emerged all laughing at Douglas Crawford's description of . . . "the lovely foliage."

Controlling the ball after a corner kick. Bob Green takes to the air.

Starting their season earlier than most fall sports teams, boy's soccer grasped the opportunity to participate in a summer league. At the end of August they finished undefeated against teams like Norton, North Attleboro, and Bishop Feehan, and were ready for the fall season.

"From the way we looked over the summer, I expected the team to be at least 8-10," comments right mid-fielder Ryan McKinley. However, as the fall season progressed, the hopes of the boy's team dwindled. Losing the opener against Sharon foreshadowed a season of problems for the soccer squad. "[The loss of] four excellent players to back and leg injuries" hurt the team's chances, adds McKinley. Sweeper Sean Sylva states, "Everyone knows we should have had a better season. The talent was definitely here but there were too many mental mistakes. The team needed much more focus and preparation." Sylva, who suffered an ankle injury and was forced to miss 5 games, agreed that injuries plagued the team. Forward Dave Tierney recalls, "There were too many times when we'd win the first game and then lose the second one against the same team." He also cited a drop in morale as a reason for the season's ending on a down note.

Nevertheless, the returning players look forward to next year and a chance to try again. "Hopefully, the good attitude will come out and we will have a successful record," says defender Dave Touloumtzis. Attitude determines altitude.

In Control

Running long distances and building up endurance, the girl's soccer team improved their skills and took control of their season.

Girl's soccer at MHS has come a long way since 1988 when the program first began. This year's team brought it even further. Under the guidance of Kim Dunn, the girls celebrated a 11-6-1 record, becoming the most successful girl's soccer team yet. "It was a very positive experience coaching my first varsity team, "says coach Dunn, "I had seen the potential of the '91 team . . . as a spectator. It was exciting to develop this potential in '92. From the beginning I laid out, simply, that we were going to work hard and make it to tournament." And make it they did. Fighting until the final game of the regular season, the girls team catapulted themselves into the Eastern Mass. Division 2-South Competition. They pounded Mt. Alvernia 6-0 in their first tournament game before being eliminated by a strong Medway team.

The season high points existed apart from the tournament, as well. Notes captain Roberta MacIvor, "The one accomplishment that may be greater than winning our first tournament game [was] our crushing Foxboro 3-2 for the first time in MHS history." The team also shined in its victories over K.P. and Millis. "Our games against King Phillip were some of our best soccer," comments forward Stacey Mullin, "Our last half against Medway too. We really played our hearts out."

Up In The Air

The MHS cheerleaders had an exciting season with a new JV squad and another year of competition.

The Mansfield High School Cheerleaders have had many new experiences since Ms. Van Pelt's arrival in 1991. The team gradually began to develop a wider range of skills as they learned more gymnastics and began to attend tumbling classes. "By creating and perfecting new routines, I found that we began to entice audiences. As a result, many students signed up for the team when we opened up try-outs," comments Van Pelt.

The new and improved cheerleaders began to turn heads around MHS. The team decided that they were ready to do something for themselves. "Cheering for the football team is good but we wanted to win our own trophies," states Juliane Murray. In the end, the cheerleaders decided to participate in competition. "It's exciting watching other squads and learning from them," says Casey Smith. All the younger members are excited to see what awaits them in the upcoming '93 competition.

The cheerleaders have also expanded to create a basketball cheering squad. "I enjoy having their support at the games," comments boy's basketball coach Mr. Hershman. In addition, the JV basketball team has been granted their request for their own cheering squad. "The JV cheering team has turned out to be a good experience for people like me who aren't part of the Varsity team," says Leah Tobin. With an enthusiastic JV team coming up, MHS cheerleading is sure to continue to improve in future years.

Time's Up!

The boy's varsity basketball team has run out of time to apply 1993's improvements to this season, but they will have their chance next year when most of the members return.

The 1993 Boy's Varsity Basketball team consisted of 13 dedicated students and one inspirational coach who all went into the season ready to work hard. Unfortunately, there was one factor preventing the team from going all the way. "Inexperience," comments Michael Cauley, "Last year's team consisted of all seniors and one junior. They had been building up their experience for a few years which lead to an extraordinary '92 season. We have talent but we're young. It will take time until we reach our peak."

Coach Hershman encouraged the team to give 110 percent despite their youth. The returning veterans from the 1992 season also played a large part in building confidence in a team filled with eager sophomores and juniors.

"This team may not have had many wins, but it was full of character and pride," says co-captain Dave Lundell who aggressively lead the team as the only returning starter from last year. Holding the record for the most steals, point guard Lundell believed in his team and loved the game, making him an excellent leader. Forward co-captain Bob Green also stayed positive throughout the season and developed into a valuable player.

"Other teammates showed great promise for the future," comments Coach Hershman. "For the future" are the key words. The team definitely has talent, but experience is necessary when under the pressure of stiff competition. The team looks forward to continued growth and hopes to peak next season.

Up For Grabs

The girl's basketball team almost started the season without a coach until coach Edmunson pulled them together.

The Girl's Basketball team had a very successful and unusual season. The team came into the pre-season without a coach but with many candidates for the job. After much deliberation, a new one was appointed: Don Edmunson, a veteran of basketball coaching and the former Athletic Director at King Philip High School.

The season started off well, with the team winning six of their first eight games. Going into the second half of the season, their record posted second in the Hocomock League. They ended the season in third place, however. The reason for the drop? "It was not that we played worse. In fact, on the whole, our skills were much more developed," comments Michelle Patchett. Unfortunately, the team's improved playing just wasn't enough to keep them in second place. Overall, though, the students were proud of their playing and their noteworthy successes, such as Sue Patchett's accumulation of over 1,000 points in her career, a first in girl's basketball at MHS. As a team, the girls showed the league that, despite their youth, they had the confidence to be strong competitors in the Hock.

The first girl at MHS to score 1,000 points in a career, senior Sue Patchett finds the lane blocked by a Franklin player.

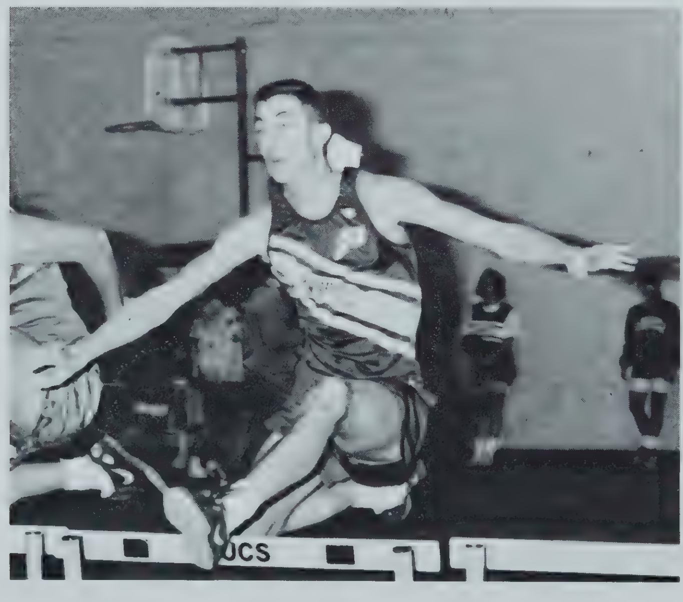
Despite having inexperienced members and a new coach, the boy's track team still found themselves . . .

Pushing Ahead

Taking on a crew of 39 boys, Spanish teacher Ms. Smith enthusiastically faced the challenge of coaching the 1992 Boy's Track team. The students immediately took to her because she dealt with them one on one. "She coached us as individuals and she cared how we did for our own personal bests--whether the team did well or not," comments Adam Briggs. Her support may just have done the trick when Craig Swanson, Rick Irving, Brian McGrail, and Brian Swanson broke the school's 4X400 relay record with their time of 3:41.9.

But if the track team had an enthusiastic coach and many strong efforts by individual team members, then a poor season? Ryan McKinley suggests, "There was definitely a lack of dedication and focus. Students wouldn't show for practice or they'd fool around at the meets. The team had talent, but they just needed to train and work to win. Individual records are excellent but they don't win the meet."

Although the season has ended, Mansfield will have a lot to look forward to next year. "The large amount of newcomers shows a promising future," comments captain Craig Swanson. This year was a year of growth and learning. Next year, the young talent will be ready to explode.



When he's not jumping music stands, Brad Varney gets a chance to show off his improvement in the hurdles.

Reaching New Heights

Not held back by a rough season, individuals on the girl's winter track team succeeded in breaking personal and school records.

Although the Girl's Winter Track team did not have a winning season in the dual meets, they succeeded in breaking school records and reaching personal bests. "That's the importance of track. It's an individual sport where you are not only competing with another athlete, but also with yourself," notes captain Amy Richendollar.

Proving herself an asset to the team, Lori Kitchen made history by repeatedly breaking the school's record in the 600 yard run. Many other athletes also came close to placing their names in the record books, such as captain Patty McKeever and Gina Flammia who both steadily tied the school's best time in the hurdles. In addition, Richendollar found herself four tenths of a second short of breaking her personal recordin the mile run at one meet. "That is when running becomes frustating," comments coach Day.

The highlight of the season? "Definately our strong win over Canton," states captain Cara Selchan, "We swept a lot of events." The moments of success made the season worth it.

By coming together during the good times as well as the bad, the girls gained a new comradery. A common interest brought thirty-eight people together on this team to experience such memorable events as the Selchans' Spaghetti Supper and the "break-up" dinner at the Town Spa. And through the long runs and daily practices the team members will still ultimately remember what junior Danielle Roberts refers to as "the happy track family."

Cara Selchan looks to the finish line to push herself through the final corner of her race.

Watching to see if her practice will pay off, Lisa Tulis follows through on her throw.

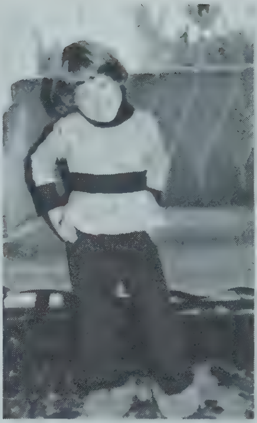
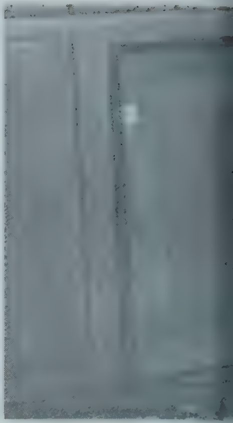
One More Step

The senior class takes a look back at their first steps before taking another.





Look at us! We were so cute. As babies, we took our first steps and smiled for the first time. Then, as we grew older, we met other kids just as small as we were who liked all the same things: Play-dough, Barbies, and Tonka Trucks. Kindergarten made Picassos of us all, our parents proudly admiring each new fingerpainting. Elementary school produced near-perfect spelling tests, 'Wensday' almost always being the exception. But our parents were delighted anyway.

Now we are so much older, but still so cute--just look at those Senior pictures! Yet we face some of the same every-day pressures as before. We bring home our report cards, hoping mom and dad won't be disappointed, devising excuses like, "But look at my grade in Gym!" Some of our friends seem to have always been around, but somehow we still don't know everyone in our senior class. Unfamiliar faces emerge in English class or study, and after getting to know them we wonder why we weren't friends before.

This year is our final step, yet an uncertain beginning all over again. As we move on to new experiences, we leave 12 years of school behind, carrying forward a collection of memories.

The First Steps

Although high school may seem like the end of the road, the underclassmen years are really the first steps students take towards their future.

We all dream of graduation: finally receiving a diploma and finishing what seems to be an interminable twelve years of school. From first grade on, we live by a mental clock counting down the years until we are "free". But once we hit high school what seems like the end is actually the beginning. "It's the start of what we do for the rest of our lives," comments freshman Kristen Alleruzzo.

What's so different about high school? Why do the first steps begin here? Because, in high school, we start making decisions about what we want in terms of an education and a career. The broad spectrum of classes allows us to experience various subjects and to test our strengths and weaknesses. From there, the students interested in an engineering career pursue a path of physics and calculus while others who hope to climb the business ladder focus on management and accounting classes. At MHS, we begin to develop ambitions and shape our lives.

Junior Jitters

Despite their calm appearance, inside juniors have got the jitters.

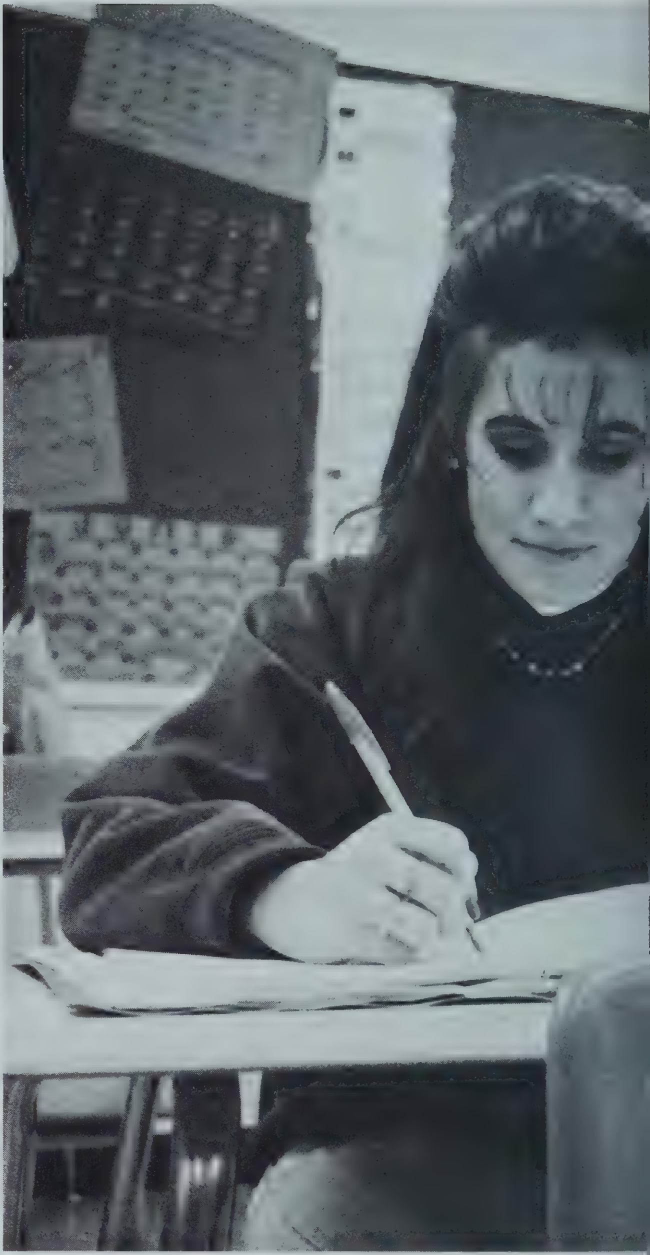
Almost everyone at MHS experiences a little nervousness before tests; but for eleventh graders, the feeling lasts all year. Because SATs, Achievement tests, and college decisions lurk nearby, juniors are forever feeling the jitters.

Practically all junior worries revolve around college. The added stress over grades and courses originates from a need to do well in order to be accepted. "Colleges look at this year's grades the most. It's the toughest year because everything counts," notes Tim Mulcahy. Shannon Moran agrees, "You need to keep up your grades for colleges to look at." Juniors are also forced to look to their futures while selecting classes for senior year. Opting for subjects that will help them through college isn't easy, especially since the majority of juniors haven't decided on college majors or possible careers.

Grades aren't the only things making juniors jittery: their first prom plays a large part, too. In addition to choosing a song, asking a date, finding something to wear, and deciding about a limo, juniors worry about what they'll do after the prom. "Things like 'Who's going where?' and 'Who's having a party?' That's what makes me a little nervous," explains John Maldonado, "It's not so much the dancing part."

Drivers' licenses provide another point of anxiety for juniors. With the recent addition of parallel parking to the driving test and several untimely discoveries concerning parking brakes, juniors are having more trouble than ever getting their licenses. "I was worried the time I took it and I'll be nervous an hour before I take [the test] a second time," comments Michael Cauley. "If I fail again it'll be embarrassing."

But the biggest thing that makes the juniors jitter is the realization that "This is it!" and next year they'll be seniors. Although the prospect of senior year seems wonderful most of the time, every junior feels a slight twinge of nervosity as the path to the future looms closer.



Awaiting a strenuous English test, Keith Infantino succumbs to the nervous habit of nail-biting.

Stopping only for the camera, John Maldonado works fervently in Physics.

Despite the popular opinion that tenth grade is a boring year, the class of 1995 has brought MHS many . . .

Sophomore Surprises

This year's sophomores startled everyone when they surpassed all the other classes in the spirit competition with a first place float and $214 worth of spirit links. "It was a surprising comeback from freshman year when we were the most apathetic class," says sophomore Joe Cascio who cites "increased confidence and enthusiasm" as the main forces driving the Class of '95.

But Sophomore spirit didn't end with the fall competition. Having had a year to become accustomed to the school, the tenth graders flooded student activities especially basketball, football and track. Most of the JV teams, manned or womanned with sophomores, have triumphed. Says sophomore Brian Patel, "I think the JV teams' winning records shows our determination."

Academically sophomores have mixed feelings. While some thought their classes were more interesting and less difficult, others says tenth grade had "too much stress." Although the class of 1995 enjoyed this year's surprises, they unanimously agreed to disliking one surprise: pop quizzes.

Taking advantage of the empty halls to get her books together, Samantha Stowell says, "The lockers are so close I can't fit so I wait until no one's around.

Given the opportunity to express their feelings about lockers, MHS sophomores list some . . . .

Locker Loathes

"My locker is crowded. I want a locker where nobody is."
—Kerri Dempsey

"All the people hanging around my locker aggravate me. I worry I won't get to class on time."
—Hilary Cheyne

"My bag doesn't fit. And whenever I go to my locker I always hit my head because the person next to me swings their locker open."
—Warren Bacon

"It drives me crazy when people lean on my locker while they talk to their friends."
—Kristin Downey

"They're too narrow and my books always fall out."
—Dave Pazniokas

"I have to weave my way through everyone. That's why I only go to my locker three times a day."
—Kerri Santsaver

"The lockers are too close to each other. There's not even enough room to breathe."
—Jarod Forget

"The top ones aren't too great for short people."
—Stefanie Signoriello

"Annoying."

For the class of 1996, starting high school means . . .

Starting Fresh

As the saying goes, "You have to start somewhere" and, for 9th graders, the high school is the place. With a new building, new teachers, and a new attitude towards learning, the transition from 8th grade at the middle school to freshman year at MHS can be a little overwhelming. "It was scary at first and I was a little worried about getting lost and being late," remembers Amanda Nieman. "But now that I know the classrooms and some upperclassmen, I feel a lot more comfortable."

For a number of freshmen, 9th grade means starting high school sports and activities. "Sure we had intramurals before, but the high school is more organized and the competition is tougher," says Andy Selchan. Nicole Forbes thinks, "High school sports are more structured and more of a commitment. The practices are demanding, but I like that sports are every day and not just twice a week." MHS clubs attract many freshmen also; "There's a whole lot more to do," comments Katie Steele.

Like every year, freshman year involves growing up, becoming more responsible, and making serious decisions. "We take everything much, much more seriously," states Jon Pierce. "No more slacking off or goofing around."

Above far right, Matt Scott and Andy Selchan talk in the bleachers while awaiting the rally festivities.

"I don't usually get a pass except when I need something out of my locker. I never just walk around . . . unless it's typing class."
—Alex Meany

Pass Times

A survey reveals freshmen attitudes and tendencies concerning hallway passes.

The average freshman uses the pass once a day to got to the bathrooms or to their lockers. A few ninth graders (2% of those surveyed) state that they hardly ever use the pass, while an outstanding 15% of freshman report that they use the pass five or more times a day, getting out almost once every class.

Most freshman admit to never filling out the pass. One ninth grader comments, "I think you shouldn't have to sign your name. Just by having the pass shows you have the teacher's permission."

Seventy-one percent of freshman surveyed feel that the hallway passes serve no purpose. "I think we should be trusted enough to say where we're going," comments one freshman. The consensus agrees, "The passes are pointless." An understandable opinion, since more than 89% of the students never had a teacher stop them in the hall to check for a pass. "Just get rid of them," one survey suggests.

Tiffanie Stockley, Robyn Sylva, and Bridget Dolezsar gather in the halls for a group shot.

Beyond The Classroom

From canoeing down the rapids, to headbanging to Jane's Addiction, teachers certainly like to break loose when they leave the hallowed halls of Mansfield High School.

The survey is in. Teachers do have lives outside of school. Don't turn the page, and we'll tell you more. We were as astonished as you will be to learn that:

Mr. von Dorster attended a Red Hot Chili Peppers concert in Paris.

Mr. Carver-Brown dives.

Mrs. Maciel is a nationally recognized canoeist.

Mr. Venuti listens to Jane's Addiction.

Mr. Deasy plays Trombone.

Mr. Tiatorio grows roses.

Mr. Goetz makes fine jewlery.

Mrs. Jackson aspires to win the Grand Slam of Tennis.

Mrs. Carli enjoys gourmet cooking.

Mrs. Fiore runs.

Mr. Tompson is a high school hoop referee.

Mr. O'Connell is an avid skier.

Mr. Morales lifts weights.

Ms. Iovieno once owned twenty-four cats.

Mrs. Martin collects postcards.

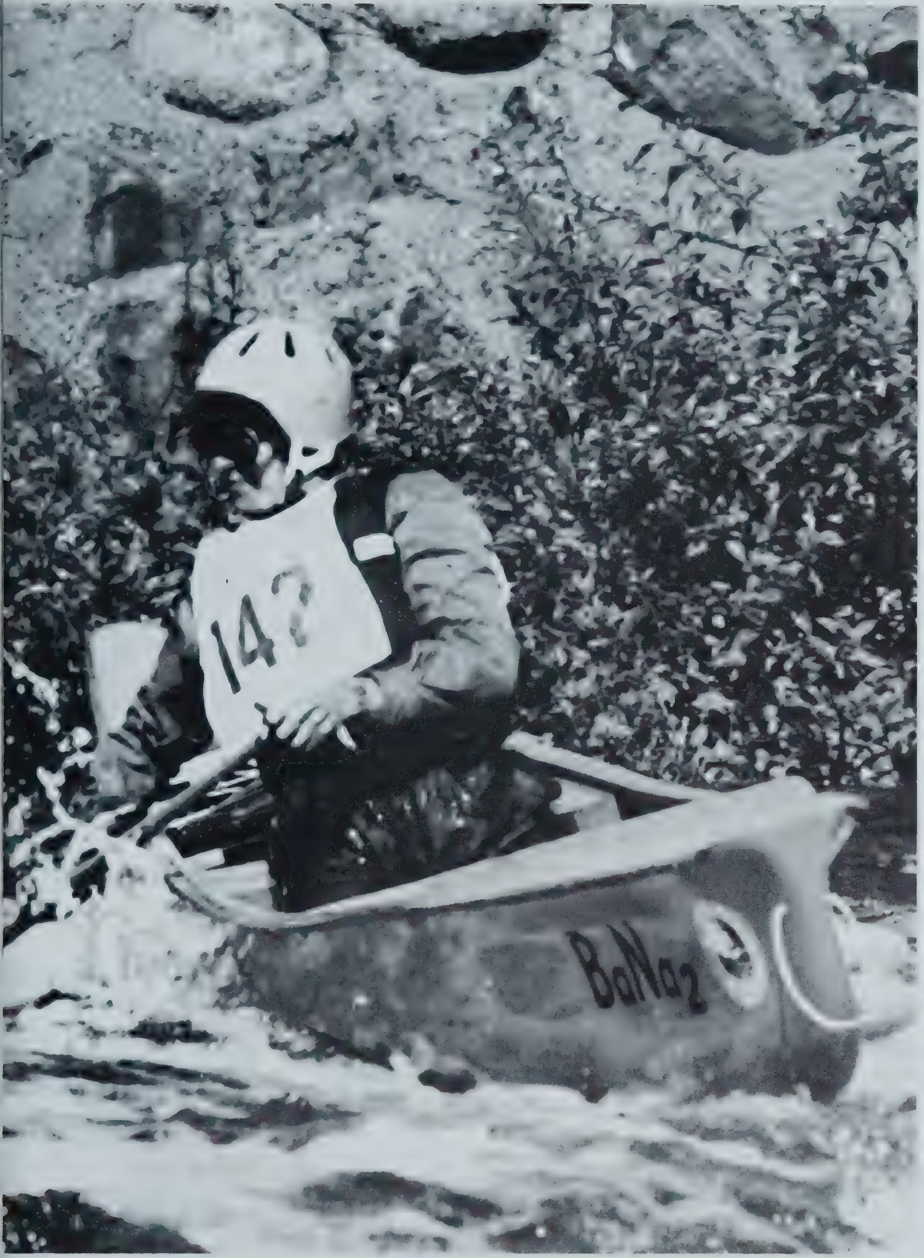
Mrs. Pineault plays the french horn in a brass ensemble.

Mrs. McMackin hugged a koala in Australia.

Mrs. Johnson enjoys dancing.

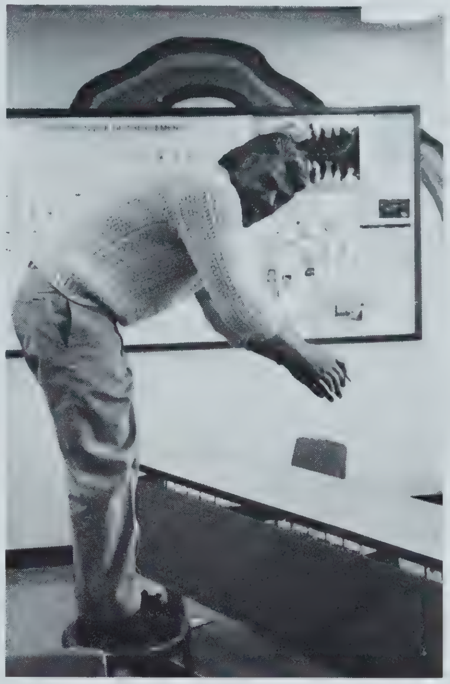
Miss Smith likes to go antiquing.

Mr. Venuti buries himself in modern literature.



Paddling her "banana," Mrs. Maciel hits some rapids.

Mr. Carver-Brown practices his diving in chemistry class.



Boasting her award-winning flowers (NOT!), Mrs Jackson gets a good laugh.

Mr. von Dorster is caught rummaging through the English department's trash.

Working For A Living

Not every employee at MHS teaches classes. But whether it involves answering phones or monitoring halls, each position has its importance.

Sure, everyone has seen these people around, but few know the magnitude of the contributions they make to Mansfield High School. They work hard to make everyone else's days easier and keep MHS running smoothly.

Check out the main office, just for a start. Besides tackling a variety of student and teacher dilemmas daily, each secretary has her own responsibilities. Mrs. Baptiste pays the bills and keeps all the money straight. Mrs. Pierce handles student attendance, making sure everyone's where they're supposed to be. Mrs. Davenport moves everyone from class to class, grade to grade, and year to year. For athletic events, whether home or away, Mrs. Kitchen knows the scoop, getting you there and getting you in.

Next, hit the halls. Dr. Conner, director of the Access Center, offers students a S.A.F.E.R. place to go. Mrs. McTernan also helps students throughout the day, acting as a matron, mentor, guide, security person, and comforting individual. Mrs. O'Malley, MHS's endearing school nurse, has a band-aid for every boo-boo. Mrs. Tighe, the Library Assistant, can find information on anything from aardvarks to zygotes. Working day and night, the custodians maintain Mansfield's pride with their endless efforts to sweep and shine our halls and classrooms.

Seldom do these people receive the recognition they deserve. Every student who attends MHS should thank these individuals who are always busy behind the scenes.

At right, Mrs. Baptiste processes the school's purchase orders.

For Just A Moment

Although the song for the evening was "For Just a Moment", prom-goers enjoyed the party all night and into the morning.

Enjoying the night air, Dave Lundell, Stephanie King, and Michelle Carter sit out on the balcony. Lundell commented, "The prom was a good way to end senior year."

Michael Sarro and Allison Jones get close on the dance floor.

At left, Dave Korins, Darni Garneau, and Kerry Richardson talk at their table. They agreed that "being with friends" was the best part of the prom.

Kelley Dolan and her date, Brad Crosby, share an intimate moment on the balcony. Crosby, who attends North Attleboro High School, was just one of the many nonlocal dates who accompanied Mansfield High students to the prom.

Adding to the party atmosphere,Matt Carpenter grabs the microphone and clears the floor for his performance.

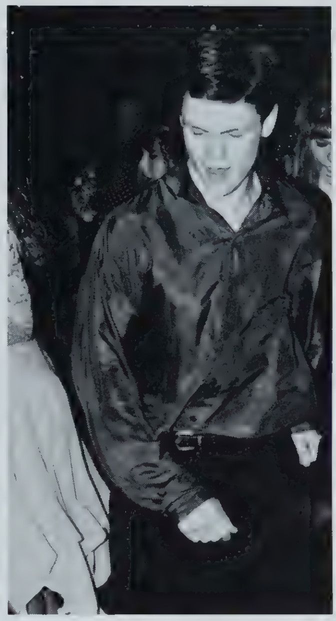
Lisa Rudokas and Elizabeth Keller enjoy dinner.

Kerri Joyce and Patrick Titus step out onto the dance floor.

BUST OUT!

With great food and live entertainment, the class of '93 partied at their senior banquet.

Looking for some good tunes, Jen Lantz, Laurie Fox and Kate Prodanis shuffle through the DJ's tapes.



Tim Landers practices his Electric Slide.

Happy to be the center of attention, Ben Moore sits contently as Kerri Austin, Melissa Landers and Heather King dance around him.

Graduation 1993

Commended for her achievements as a scholar and an athlete, Cheryl Tupaj accepts her plaque from Mrs. Flaherty.

One graduate exclaims his happiness from his cap.

Paul Albrecht, Julie Alleruzzo, and Alex Aleman wait anxiously for their diplomas.

David Tierney receives the Prinipal's Award at Class Day.

Members of the Class of '93 recite their final Pledge of Allegiance together.

Brian Davis sports his sunglasses before graduating.

Dressed in their caps and gowns, Chris Brennan, Jamie Sullivan, and Pat Titus pose for a final picture together before leaving commencement ceremonies.

At the abbey, "Maria," played by Patty McKeever, sings about snowflakes on her nose and eyelashes in a song about her favorite things.

Melissa Landers and Michael Hourigan portray "Elsa Schraeder" and "Georg Von Trapp".

Sitting on the garden bench , "Liesl" and "Ralph", Stephanie King and Derek Dutra, talk about life, love, and growing up.

Wearing the play clothes Maria has made out of curtains, the children sing "The Sound of Music" .

At far right, John Pierce and Leah Tobin, a couple at Georg's party, try to enjoy themselves despite the tension between the Austrian and German guests.

On the evenings of April 2nd and 3rd, the MHS Auditorium came alive with...

The Sound of Music

Scurrying back to their bedroom, the young Von Trapp children -- Hillary Cheyne, Colleen DiGiampietro, Zoila Garzoglio, & Stephanie Correia-- remember their favorite things to lessen their fear of the thunder.

"Max", played by Dan Garzoglio, gives advice on how to live off rich friends.

To Our Daughter, Denise, And The Class of 1993:

Remember to listen, remember to care,
Don't forget to laugh and love, and always share -
Remember to struggle and strive, give it your Best, and if you fall short, get up and go on -
Learn from your mistakes -
Have faith and never lose touch -
Always remember
I am your Parent, I am your Friend.
